Security officers ready to direct traffic first week of semester

Patience will be the key to solving parking problems

By Brandi Peterman
Staff Writer

The beginning of a new semester usually means the parking situation will be stressful for many and finding a place to park can be a real headache.

Students at the college can be frustrated at times.

"The first week of school seems to be the craziest," said Kandi West, OKCCC student. "After that it seems to be OK."

Keith Bourque, Director of OKCCC Safety and Security, said there is often available parking in lots D and E. Those lots are located on the west side of campus.

Security officers will be directing traffic the first three days of school to assist the students in finding a parking space.

The first week of school can also be a challenging time for the college's security officers. Bourque said, this time of year, they not only have to brave extremely cold weather but often extremely emotional students. Communication can be very difficult through a car window with the heater and radio on, he said.

Bourque said the best way to ensure good communication and decrease the risk of any accidents is to make good eye contact with the security officers. Try to verbalize your needs, he said, because the officers can't always understand hand signals from moving vehicles.

He said the officers are trained to direct traffic and will know where all the empty parking spaces are.

Last month's huge ice storm has left its mark on people's nerves and their cars. It has also left an impression on OKCCC's parking lots — via potholes.

J.B. Messer, assistant director of the Physical Plant, said the school will be repairing each hole individually, as they arise. He said there are also plans to repave parts of some parking areas.

"We will be rebidding for the paving of the parking lot in the future," he said.

Students also seem to be concerned about

Help for students a question away

Surely everyone has experienced that lost feeling when entering a new school, whether that might be in the form of questions resembling, "Which line do I stand in?" or "How do I read this darn map anyway?" or simply the distinctive lost puppy dog look.

That's why OKCCC faculty and staff are taking extra measures toward guiding students — especially new students dash in the right direction during the first few weeks of the semester.

The welcome table is the first thing many students may notice when entering at the main entrance. Prospective Student Services has set up this table to assist students.

"We want to help students find their way, whether that be paying tuition and showing them which line to stand in or handing out enrollment forms and maps.

Oops, Britney does it again

If you happened to be one of the million viewers who tuned into the American Music Awards Monday evening, Jan. 8, you had the opportunity to see teen queen Britney Spears rock the house.

As Britney performed her latest hit "Stronger," her provocative manner was shocking and insulting to any viewer who might have had children watching.

There was a lot of her tossing and hip swinging that heated up the screen. Her actions helped the viewer see her in a different light. Any good girl image she may have had went down the tubes and will be forever lost in TV land.

She paraded around the stage performing a toned-down striptease. That truly proved she's not that innocent.

Britney needs to get off that fence post she's on and decide if she wants to be America's darling or a lady of the night.

Britney is taking the lead of former divas who shed their applepie images. She needs to learn from the mistakes of her predecessors, like the Spice Girls. After they let their hair down, the audience let them know they weren't interested.

Miss Spears claims not to be a role model for young girls and says that parents should raise their own children by their standards, not hers. If she truly feels that way than she needs to pull all the Britney dolls and all the bubble-gum lip gloss off the shelves. She is targeting a younger market, because I don't know any adults with a Britney Spears poster on their wall.

The parents do need to take responsibility for what their children are watching and listening to on the radio, but artists like Britney have given parents a false sense of security. When she arrived on the scene she was sugary sweet. Now we get to tell our children that they can't listen to her music anymore. That is a battle I'm sure a lot of parents don't want to fight.

As a viewer, you are entitled to honesty and to be able to turn on your TV without receiving an eyeful of filth. Britney needs to be aware that women fought a long hard battle to be looked at with respect and not as play toys. Britney, do them and us all a huge favor. Put your clothes back on!

Racial complaint unjust portrayal of disruption

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the recent article "Student receives NAACP support." I have spoken with a number of people about this, and everyone is in agreement. We are tired of inappropriate behavior being excused simply because of someone's race.

I am irate about this student's behavior in not one, but two, separate occasions with two different people.

The NAACP is calling it "discrimination"? This is not high school, junior high, or elementary school where not only the students, but also parents of the students, subject educators and other students to threats.

I am tired of unacceptable behavior in classrooms being dismissed, simply because of someone's color.

I pay for class here just as everyone else does and with that should go the ability to feel safe while in my classroom.

It's time for people to stop tolerating this behavior.

My message to students who want to disrupt class is this: Grow up! Start acting like a human being. Stop hiding behind your race simply to justify your inappropriate behavior. The NAACP needs to stop deeming this type of behavior as "discrimination" and seeing it for what it really is: bullying as a means of getting one's way.

I know many teachers and students on this campus. I have never known any teacher to behave in a discriminatory way toward any student. My own research regarding this situation shows that the student was not asking a question, but was in fact complaining about the amount of homework that was given.

The student's behavior escalated from that point to one of aggressive behavior, and once again making inappropriate remarks to the instructor.

My message for this student and others like her: Don't use your race as an excuse for your own behavioral problems.

Comments and Reviews

Fast-paced gun movie offers twisty kidnap tale

Guns, kidnapping, violence, backstabbing, these are all the ingredients that make a good movie. In that respect, "The Way of the Gun" does not disappoint.

Just released on DVD, "The Way of the Gun" blends a dark comedy with intense action and violence. Director Christopher McQuarrie ("The Usual Suspects") supplies the script with ironic twists and turns along with limiting the characters from mindless clichés.

The movie begins with two petty criminals who stumble upon a way to strike it rich. All they have to do is kidnap a young expecting mother. The only problem is that she is a surrogate mother for a rich man on the wrong side of the law.

Once kidnapped, the mother begins labor while the criminals are waiting for the ransom. From that point, the plot twists on. It leaves the viewer to figure out why this unborn child is so coveted by all.

The movie is set up nicely with a great young cast. Ryan Phillippe ("Anti-Trust") breaks out of his usual mold to play Parker, one of the two criminals. Benicio Del Toro ("Traffic," "Fear" and "Loathing in Las Vegas") plays Longbaugh, the other dark and ominous criminal.

Taye Diggs ("Go," "The Woods") plays one of several homicidal bodyguards for the pregnant Robin, played by Juliette Lewis ("Cape Fear," "Natural Born Killers").

The always tough and nasty James Caan ("The Yards", "Eraser") rounds out the cast with his typical bad guy image. It's not much of a stretch for Caan, but like always he gives the role that brisk and confident image that it very much needed.

This movie won't win any awards, and it might not capture a wide fan base, but it is fast and furious with only a couple slow parts. All in all, this movie had me guessing from the start.

I recommend this DVD to anyone who likes a lot of gunplay and a little confusion in their movies.

Hanks and Wilson alone

Many Oklahomans felt like they were trapped on a deserted island during the ice storms. Most people were only trapped in the comfort of their own homes.

However, that was not the case for one castaway. Tom Hanks showed us the ins and outs of life on an island in his blockbuster hit, "Cast Away."

This film grossed an estimated $24,076,600 during its opening weekend, not bad for a movie with only a handful of actors.

Hanks does an outstanding job portraying Chuck Noland, a FedEx manager who lives his life by the clock. Noland is obsessed with deadlines and is consumed with accounting for every moment lost.

Life on the island starts out with a bang, I mean a big bang. This was by far the best crash scene I have ever seen.

The special effects were fantastic. The whole audience was holding its breath as the plane went down. There was a sigh of relief when Hanks appeared on the screen. Was there ever any doubt?

Hanks gives an outstanding performance in his one-man show. He reportedly shot the first half of the film in three weeks and then took almost a year off before resuming production.

In that year Hanks transformed himself into a shipwrecked man, who definitely lacked human companionship.

Time lapses four years in the film when Hanks returns to the screen with long, matted hair and teeth that haven't been brushed in a very long time. He is wearing nothing but a loincloth.

Ladies, it is not as appealing as it may seem; he weighs about 80 pounds.

Noland befriends a volleyball that washed on shore from the wreckage. Wilson, as he calls the ball, becomes his only confidant. The emotional attachment he forms with this ball, though bizarre, is very touching.

Hanks is Oscar worthy for his performance in this film. He is by far one of the best actors of our time. This movie is definitely worth the trip.

New odd year, same thoughts

With this being the real new millennium and all, I'd just like to say that finally, a man is the editor of the Pioneer.

What were the bosses thinking when they chose women to head the paper?

Good gravy... Good gravy... Again, good gravy...

It's a privilege and also my given right being the first male OKCCC editor since the last, old millennium.

It's about time and I won't waste any more time with pointless, unused phrases like "good gravy."

Here are my first proclamations as the official editor of the Pioneer.

1. More video game reviews and no more of those "romantic drama" movie reviews.
2. More ads featuring scantily clad female spring breakers.
3. An entire page devoted to why I, Vu A. Vu, should be president of the college.
4. Lobbying for more free sample boxes with medicines such as "Vivarin" and "Tylenol."

I'm sure Adolf Hitler had the same proclamations in mind when he took in charge of Germany.

But thanks to brave people like Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., we have weapons to fight the war of ignorance.

People thinking they are superior. People thinking it's their God-given right to live on a piece of land exclusively. People thinking that using sheer force, violence is the only way to fight battles.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson was arrested last week, defending, protesting for the life of convicted murderer Wanda Jean Allen, the first woman to be put to death in the official state of Oklahoma.

Jackson spent a night in jail, and still wanted to be there to watch Allen as she is put to death.

"So she won't be alone," he said.

Whether she did murder or not, is not the point. The point is some people end up on death row because they are poor, because they are illiterate, because they are products of ignorance.

Many years ago, a man died because of ignorance. His death was not in vain, because now, I can go to school.

Will Wanda Jean Allen's death have the same impact?

Only time will tell.

Film series kicks off with former OKCCC prof lecturing on 1956 film

By Vu A. Vu
Editor

The Arts and Humanities division film series "The Evolving Portrait of Native American in Film" will have its first free lecture and movie at 6 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 1, in the college theater.

Ph.D. candidate Brad Raley, former OKCCC adjunct professor and current University of Oklahoma graduate professor, will conduct a lecture on John Ford's "The Searchers," shot in 1956.

Raley said "The Searchers" was a wonderful film that deals with mythology and race.

"(Ford) was concerned about racial issues and very concerned about misrepresentation," Raley said.

However, he said, the movie's star John Wayne had a different view.

"(Wayne) bought into the idea that racial whites were supposed to take land because the Indians couldn't use it all," Raley said.

Arts and Humanities Dean Susan VanSchuyver recruited Raley because of his expertise in the film "The Searchers," having taught six classes dealing with the film, Raley said.

The film series follows with Humanities 2003.

The film series came to life after the Oklahoma

Humanities Council awarded OKCCC a $5000 grant in the fall semester.

That grant is matched with funding from the OKCCC Development fund, Kay Edwards fund and Student Life.

Deposit for Spanish trip due by Jan. 28

By Michaela Marx
Contributing Writer

When it is cold and gray in Oklahoma, it is the right time to think about a trip to the warm climate of Spain.

OKCCC Spanish professors Patricia Brooks and Dianne Broyles will take 25 students to Spain May 18 through the 29.

Even though that date seems far away, the first deposit of $250 is due Jan. 28.

"This is the first time for us to go to Spain, but we have had trips to Mexico for six years," Brooks said.

Brooks and Broyles also have led tours to Ecuador before.

Students can earn three credits of conversational Spanish while cruising the country for 12 days, said Brooks.

Space is limited. Brooks said students should apply soon. In the past the spots for the course filled very quickly she said.

The group will spend five nights in Madrid, with a day trip to Avila and Segovia.

Then the journey will lead them to Toledo. From there they will move south to Sevilla, Cordeva, Granada and Malaga.

"There is a lot of excitement about the trip," she said.

The total cost of the trip is $2,300 including airfare, hotel, two meals a day, ground transportation and museum and sightseeing fees.

The tuition for the Spanish class is covered as well with the amount.

She said students with all Spanish levels are welcome. However, students should have had at least one course of Spanish, she said.

For more information contact Brooks at 682-1611, ext. 7655 or Broyles at ext. 7657.

Lunch cards make campus mealtime convenient

By Shelly Clark
Contributing Writer

Students who are rushing through classes all day may not have time to stop for lunch or may not think they can afford to eat out on a student's tight budget.

Convenience and savings are two reasons behind the Steal-a-Meal program offered by Sellers Catering, the company running the cafeteria on the campus of OKCCC.

This incentive-based program offers the consumer an opportunity to save money and time in the college cafeteria.

The Steal-a-Meal card is a prepaid card used for any purchase in the cafeteria, food or beverage, excluding vending machine items.

The cards, sold for $20, have an actual purchase value of $22. The program is "a good value for everyone," said Jim Sellers, owner of Sellers Catering.

The actual card is a bit larger than a credit card and is arranged in denominations of $.05, $.10, $.25 and $1.

When the holder presents the card upon checkout at the cafeteria, it is punched according to the dollar amount spent. Once the $20 has been spent, the bonus $2 is then available.

"The goal behind the program is to expand the use of the facility," said Sellers. Currently, the cafeteria serves between 900 to 1,000 customers per day plus on campus catering events.

The program has also expanded to individual departments of the college.

A department can purchase the card through the catering office and is able to use it for their individual functions.

Not only does this make it efficient for the college, but also saves on billing costs through the catering department, said Sellers.

The cards can be purchased during normal business hours of the cafeteria or at the bookstore.

OKCCC offers wide variety of clubs, organizations

By Mark Stack
Staff Writer

Most of the time we tend to think of student clubs as a way to make our transcript look better while we were in high school.

Now that those days are gone, you can turn to student clubs to help you with your major. Or you can just join a club to interact and communicate with people similar to you.

Either way, OKCCC offers a variety of student clubs that you can take advantage of whether it's for learning or leisure. Here are just a few to choose from.

•Drama Club will bring out the actor in you. Drama Club provides an atmosphere where future actors and actresses can learn and create around each other. The club also helps out with theater productions, including the two plays put on each semester through the theater arts program.

•Science Club is an organization promoting an interest in science. Students enrolled in biology, physical science, earth science, or any area of science can take part to better their studies. It provides a place for students to talk about the latest events and topics in the world of science.

•Psychology Club provides students with an environment to visit and interact with others wanting to learn more about human behavior. The club also offers an occasional guest speaker.

•Student Art Guild is offered to anyone who has a passion for the arts. Monthly meetings are held generally for field trips to museums or lectures.

•Baptist Collegiate Ministries provides encouragement for Christian fellowship here on campus. Meeting once a week, BCM helps its members by showing them how to grow as Christians and disciples. You will also learn how to be involved in responsible church membership.

•Chi Alpha is sponsored by the Assembly of God Church, and is open to any denomination. Chi Alpha helps students promote their spiritual life by preparing them for worship and fellowship.

•Christians on Campus is another club sponsored by a local church, the Church in Oklahoma City. Much like the other religious clubs, Christians on Campus also provides any student at OKCCC with the opportunity to grow spiritually around other fellow Christians.

So there you go. That is just a sample of the many clubs that OKCCC has to offer. If you would like information on all the other clubs to join, pick up a Student Clubs and Organizations pamphlet that can be found in the office of Student Life.

You should also attend the Organizations Fair that will be held on campus Jan. 23 and 24.

Scholars of London to perform Jan. 23

By Mark Stack
Staff Writer

The British are coming!

It's true, as a part of the college's Cultural Awareness Series, the British vocal quartet, the Scholars of London are set to perform at 7 p.m. Tuesday Jan. 23 in the college theater.

Performing almost 3,000 concerts in 50 different countries, the Scholars are not only well traveled, they are also well received wherever they perform.

After scouring through 10 newspaper reviews about the Scholars, not one bad review was written about their incredible and memorable performances.

Founded in 1970, the Scholars contrived their name after the then all-male group received scholarships to sing in the Kings College Chapel at Cambridge University.

Now 31 years later, a couple of faces have changed, but their purpose remains the same. They expect to give their audiences the best a cappella performances of European music.

The group consists of soprano Kym Amps, counter-tenor Angus Davidson, tenor Robin Doveton and bass-baritone David van Asch.

Doveton and van Asch are the two founding members, with Amps joining in 1983 and Davidson joining three years later.

The Scholars typically perform a wide variety of music generally covering a span of five centuries.

Songs ranging from the Renaissance to "Songs from the time of the English and Spanish Armada" and even from the Shakespeare era can all be heard.

The quartet will also be giving a lecture on campus the day after their concert. The lecture is entitled "Early Music in England and Europe."

The lecture will be held at 1 p.m. Jan. 24 in room 1N1 in the school of nursing.

The Scholars of London have already left an impression on students at other colleges.

"The masterclass the following morning was like a semester's course in singing and ensemble in two hours' time," said David Hemphill, a student at Arizona University explaining how the lecture at his school benefited him.

The lecture is free to anyone who wants to come. The tickets for the Jan. 23 concert are $5 for general admission and $4 for students and senior citizens.

Tickets can be purchased at the door the day of the performance or in advance by calling the Office of Cultural Programs and Community Development at 682-1611, ext. 7579.

Welcome table set up to help students find way

"We want to give them a good start," said Michael Franco, coordinator of Community Outreach.

The table will remain through the first week of the semester.

Students can also find direction from faculty and staff wearing buttons bearing the slogan, "Need help? Ask me."

Student Development Counselor Ed Williams assures that there is an abundance of help for students.

"Students needing help can go to Student Life, Student Development, Financial Aid, professors or really any of the main areas," said Williams.

"Most of us are interested in helping students who need it."

Counselors encourage new students to attend orientation although not everyone can make it, said Williams.

For those who cannot attend, New Student Orientation is also available online at www.okc.cc.ok.us/orientation

On the website, students can find a wide variety of help ranging from topics such as "Parking and Safety Tips" and "Computing Your GPA" to "Upcoming Campus Events."

Student Life has planned several events for "Welcome Week" and the following week to help new students feel comfortable, said Mike Jones, coordinator of student activities.

On Jan. 17 and 18, Student Life will be hosting welcome-back sundaes. Students and faculty can get their free ice cream at the red counter near the student union.

"Students can find assistance here as well," said Jones, referring to the volunteers serving ice cream.

Student Life is also sponsoring an Organizations Fair, which will take place during the second week on Jan. 24 and 25.

Here, students will receive help and information about the various campus clubs.

They will also be given the opportunity to sign up during this time.

Students can find all kinds of help around the campus. All they have to do is ask.

First week parking problems addressed

the safety of the parking lot.

"I would like to see more lights and security in the parking lot at night," said D'Lyn Kiser.

Bourque said security officers can be called anytime to escort students to their cars.

If people will just be patient and follow directions, everything should run smoothly, said Bourque.

By the second week everyone should be familiar with the school and the parking lot and everything can get back to normal.
