Keating appoints new regent

By Mark Stack
Editor

Gov. Frank Keating appointed Candy Hines as the new Regent for OKCCC, taking over the spot that opened when Regent Dan Hardage's seven-year term expired in May.

Hines officially began serving her seven-year term as a regent May 22. Her term will end in May 2009.

Candy Hines

Although her appointment was not yet official, Hines had the opportunity to sit in during the May 20 board meeting and was very impressed.

"I was struck by how professional it was," she said. "It is very well done and incredibly informative."

The taste of her first board meeting was just enough to get Hines energized about her term.

"I'm really excited, and I look forward to being a part of this institution and hope to make a difference," said Hines.

Although she was familiar with OKCCC, Hines already has a new appreciation for the college.

"I couldn't believe all the different programs and courses that [OKCCC] offered," said Hines.

Hines said with the great programs available at OKCCC, she would really like to get the word out to the community so they can take advantage of the opportunities here.

"I also have better knowledge as to what is required from a regent, and so I look forward to the challenge," said Hines.

Parking laws to be enforced

By Kat Mohr
Staff Writer

The appearance of OKCCC might be changing drastically but some things seem to never change — parking.

Many students make hasty decisions when trying to find a parking spot the first week of school and forget to abide by the traffic rules.

Keith Bourque, coordinator of campus safety and security, said the first week of school, campus security will be directing traffic in every parking lot to help students find available parking.

Bourque said it is important that students acknowledge the designated parking areas because after the first week of classes, campus security will be handing out tickets for anyone parked illegally.

Students caught parking in staff parking will be fined $5, which seems like pocket change when compared to the $50 fine issued for students illegally parked in handicap spots.

Students will also receive a fine of $25 if their vehicle is found parked in front of a fire lane.

Double parking, along with any other parking violations, constitutes a $5 fine.

Besides parking illegally students can also be fined for a series of moving violations.

Students who fail to stop at a stop sign or yield to a pedestrian can receive a fine of $25.

Students who ignore the one-way signs or choose to take a short cut to the parking lot by going the wrong way on a one-way street will be fined $25.

Students who are caught speeding or driving recklessly will also receive a fine of $25.

"Anytime people are driving anywhere they need to follow the posted speed limits and traffic laws, especially when they're driving in parking lots where there are pedestrians present," Bourque said.

Anyone interested in receiving more information about the college's traffic and parking regulations can pick up a pamphlet in the campus safety and security office, located on the first floor of the main building.

Winning creates patriotic interest

I love soccer, but that flame of passion only sparks up one month in every four years.

Of course, what I'm speaking about is the World Cup of soccer that is held in a different country every fourth year. Most people might remember the complete soccer pandemonium that struck the United States in 1994 when we hosted the Cup.

The World Cup has a tendency to bring nations to their feet with soccer fans having an overabundance of unbridled enthusiasm and patriotism only matched by celebrations of victory during war.

Most of the time, 31 countries come to a complete standstill so the masses can cheer on their country for world supremacy. Most of the time there's one country who really doesn't give a rat's bleep about any of it — the United States.

As I stayed up to watch the United States' first game against Portugal, which ended nicely at 6 a.m. with a 3-2 win by the way, I knew very few Americans around the country stayed up or woke up to witness the same miracle I did.

I know that if this were a European or South American country, that match would have earned bigger ratings than game 7 between the Los Angeles Lakers and Sacramento Kings, even if it did start at 4 a.m.

The same can also be said about U.S. fans, or lack thereof, who actually attend these games. Except for the weak and always classless "over-rated" chant that could be heard after the United States took a 3-0 lead, you would hardly have known an American was in attendance.

But it's not just about sports. It's the union of citizens gathering around to root on their country, the pride of a nation. An example would be the Argentinian tennis player who asked all his matches at the French Open be scheduled around Argentina's soccer matches. Not too many folks around here would sacrifice their career to literally watch someone else's.

It's comparable to the summer and winter Olympics. We root and cheer our athletes to victory in sports we could care less about. We become track and field fans for a few days. How about a soccer fan for 90 minutes? We cheer on our Olympic athletes because we want to be the best, we want to hear the national anthem playing loudly as Old Glory is raised high in the air. Symbolizing where we have made it. The World Cup is no different.

But I have no understanding as to why there is no interest at all in such a patriotic event. There was little hype on television and in the papers, until we won. I know our attention is divided among other things, like basketball and football, but like the Olympics, it only happens once ever four years. It doesn't require a whole lot of our time.

Let's face it, a lot of countries hate us. And there's no better way to show them up than by beating them at their own beloved game. I don't care if we win or lose, I just want us to show some exuberant and united patriotism. Let's go, America. You only have to be a soccer fan 90 minutes at a time.

Free life jackets available for kids

To the editor:

A successful program to loan life jackets to families who visit state lakes has expanded to include 19 U.S. Army Corps of Engineers lakes in Oklahoma.

For the third summer, visitors to Oklahoma lakes who forget to bring life jackets for their children can borrow them free of charge, thanks to a collaborative program involving state and federal agencies and water safety advocates.

In an effort to prevent drownings, the second-leading cause of fatal unintentional injuries to Oklahoma children, the Oklahoma SAFE KIDS Coalition is continuing the "Brittany Project," its life jacket loaner program, at 16 state lakes and 19 Corps parks.

The program is named for 4-year-old Brittany Mobley, who drowned Memorial Day weekend six years ago. She wasn't wearing a life jacket.

The program will offer free use of children's life jackets at 16 different parks at the following Oklahoma Department of Tourism lakes: Eufaula, Fort Gibson, Green Leaf, Keystone, Murray, Quartz Mountain, Tenkiller, Texoma, and Thunderbird. Life jackets are usually available on freestanding kiosks located on the beaches.

New this year, loaner jackets will be available at 19 parks owned and operated by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers: Birch, Canton, Copan, Eufaula, Ft. Gibson, Ft. Supply, Heyburn, Hugo, Kaw, Keystone, Oologah, Pine Creek, R.S. Kerr, Sardis, Skiatook, Tenkiller, Texoma, Waurika, and Webbers Falls.

Life jackets at these lakes will be available at the gatehouses.

In 2000, 25 Oklahoma children age 15 and under drowned — mostly in lakes. Not one child has drowned in the past two summers at lakes that participated in the Brittany Project.

In addition to SAFE KIDS, sponsors include Family & Friends of Dona and Greg Williams, Phillips Petroleum and the Oklahoma Department of Tourism. Dona is the mother of Brittany. She started raising funds and giving out life jackets at Lake Thunderbird on the one-year anniversary of her daughter's death.

Now, instead of giving out life jackets for families to keep, the Brittany Project offers loaner jackets in several sizes for children to use and return when they are finished swimming.

"Most people realize if the jackets aren't returned, a child who comes after them may not be protected," said Collar.

Scenery, cast help make 'Insomnia' summer's best

The legend is back on the big screen, and this time the film is actually pretty good.

Al Pacino plays Los Angeles police detective Will Dormer in the new psychological thriller "Insomnia."

Dormer and his partner Hap Eckhart, played by Martin Donovan, are sent to Alaska to assist in solving the murder of a local teenage girl.

Dormer immediately suffers from time disorientation.

He can't establish the time of day in Alaska's six months of sunlight.

The constant sunlight combined with Dormer's inability to pin the murderer, begin to weigh heavily on his mind, keeping him from ever getting any sleep in the great north-west.

In the midst of the investigation, Dormer and Eckhart are also battling the Internal Affairs division back home in Los Angeles. Both Dormer and Eckhart are being investigated for possibly planting evidence on suspects.

Eckhart plans to cut a deal with IA, while Dormer is adamant about Eckhart not copping to anything since it could lead to Dormer's convicted felons being set free.

Assigned to help out the two lead detectives is Ellie

Burr, a young and extremely green cop played by Hilary Swank.

Burr is looking for any way she can to break through and show what she can do, but she doesn't exactly know where start or what to look for.

Dormer gives Burr some good beginners advice, which she takes and applies very quickly.

The movie is incredibly well-paced, giving us much of the past history with both Dormer and the murdered teenager.

It flows so nicely that once Robin Williams makes his first appearance in the movie, it's basically forgotten that he was even cast in the film.

Williams plays one of the suspected murderers named Walter Finch, a local author whose book turned up in the belongings of the slain girl.

As good of a detective as Dormer is, Finch is a shrewd and incredibly composed man who appears to always be one step ahead of Dormer.

The scenery was absolutely spectacular, some of the best I have ever seen in any movie.

Glaciers, ice fields, mountains, waterfalls and so many other geographical marvels filled the screen which tend to take your breath away at each passing glance.

One of the best scenes in the movie was a chase through fog, a unique twist adding real suspense to something that is usually nickel and dimed to death.

"Insomnia" is definitely a film worth seeing, as it gives us actual drama and great acting during the over-hyped and always disappointing summer blockbuster season.

Although it was a thrilling movie, I would like to borrow a line from David Spade.

This movie was good the first time I saw it when it was "The Pledge" starring Jack Nicholson.

Book proves life is what you make of it

Although beaches are hard to find in Oklahoma, beach-book devouring during the scorching summer is a necessity.

A fun, easy-to-read beach book to ingest is "Jemima J" by Jane Green.

Jemima, the main character, is a British woman that exudes kooky unhappiness by her own choice.

She is not only unhappy with her body, she is unsatisfied with her whole life.

She blames everything on her weight: her inability to get a promotion, her lack of a boyfriend and her less-than-glamorous lifestyle.

While this sounds whiny, it grows into a humorous escape into the mind of a troubled woman who grows to appreciate herself.

Her adventure includes travel, online romance and eating disorders with a few twists of fate.

The author speaks in a friendly, almost gossip tone and invites the reader into the mind of other characters along with our troubled heroine.

If you liked "Bridget Jones' Diary" and desire a relaxing and surprising story, you will definitely enjoy this book.

Marvel icon hits the big screen

Spider-Man is based on the legendary Marvel comic books which sparked the idea for an action packed film.

Director Sam Raimi, screenwriter David Koepp and company have transformed the comic book hero into the movie of the summer. They capture both the charm and visual style of Marvel Comics' 40-year-old web-slinging legend with wit and affection.

Tobey Maguire was perfect for the nerd Peter Parker and the superhero Spider-Man.

Kirsten Dunst was not producer Grant Curtis's, or director Sam Raimi's first choice for the action film. Her character, Mary Jane Watson, can't figure out what she wants or which guy to get involved with but is determined to make it as an actress on the big screen.

Willem Dafoe is charming in a devious way which makes him ideal for the Green Goblin, although he is more appealing when his witty smile and suave expressions are not covered up by the Goblin suit.

Just like the beginning of the comic, the film headlines the smart geek that no one pays attention to. Parker associates with his only friend Harry Osborn played by James Franco. Although extremely bright, Parker's shyness and studious nature often caused him to be branded a social outcast.

Watson, the most popular girl in school, just happens to be Parker's lifelong crush and next door neighbor. Watson's biggest problem is deciding what to wear.

At the age of six, Parker's parents die in a horrible accident leaving him to be raised by his aunt and uncle. He grows up living a very sheltered life.

Parker's life takes a sudden change when, on a class field trip, Parker is bitten by a gene-altering spider. At the time there are no real side effects until the next morning.

Parker is confused, but the answer becomes clear when he realizes he must use his abilities to protect his fellow man. He then has no alternative but to create the alter ego, Spider-Man.

"With power comes great responsibility," the motto his uncle refers to in the movie becomes the answer to life.

The story is well told, and the characters will not disappoint anyone who values the comic books.

For years the comic book character has been a household name to children across the nation. Thanks to Columbia TriStar, the magic has been brought to the big screen. I give the movie of the summer a B-. Do not forget about the sequel that is scheduled for an early fall 2004 release.

Improved college website to go live June 10

By Ashley Martin
Staff Writer

After a short delay, OKCCC's new and improved website will be going live Monday, June 10.

The original launch date was set for May 22, but after some software problems occurred, the date was moved.

"We wanted to avoid confusion for the students, so we ended up getting rid of the software we were originally going to use," said Stacy Meldrum, director of public relations.

"Going live" means that the transition from the old website to the new website will be complete. The site will be up and running, and all student information will be accessible.

Meldrum said she is excited about the new website, which has been under construction for the past eight months.

"I'm real proud of it," she said.

"I think it's going to be much easier for students to navigate."

Meldrum said more than 2,000 web pages within the site had to be redesigned with only one web designer working full time.

Students will be able to access each department on campus as well as obtain free student email through the navigation bar on the left side of each page.

Meldrum said many of the final decisions on the site's design were due to student input in the form of focus groups.

"Students expressed their desire for bright pictures and access to the information they wanted as quickly as possible," she said.

"[The students] were not charmed by the 'bells and whistles' of the former site."

Through the new website, students will be offered the opportunity to sign up for monthly News For You e-mail containing information about enrollment, student union activities and club news.

"Students will also be able to receive alerts when the campus is closed due to bad weather," Meldrum said.

If a student has a cell phone that receives e-mail, they will have the option of having updates sent to their phones.

Meldrum wanted to assure students that their e-mail boxes would not be bombarded with any 'spam' from the college if they signed up on the mailing list.

"[They will receive] just one short, informative e-mail a month," she said.

Meldrum said students will find the Mine Online feature easier than ever to navigate.

Mine Online consists of student records such as grades, schedules and fee status.

Meldrum said she is looking forward to phase two of the project, which will include a virtual tour, a message board and an alumni association page.

She is also planning a Web Advisory Committee of faculty, staff and students to be developed soon.

"The top two determining factors when it comes to a student deciding where to go to school is a visit to the campus and the appearance of the school's website," Meldrum said.

Summer film course to be held at OKCCC next month

By Kelly Clayton
News Writing I Student

The Oklahoma Film Institute has scheduled a three-week film course for the summer to be held at OKCCC from July 8 through 26.

During the three-week period, students will learn to organize and put information together for the production of a film, said Fritz Kiersch, professor of film and video production.

Students will be given an assignment for a film and will work together to complete it.

The 15-minute educational film is about pesticide problems American Indians face with artifacts previously shown in museums that have since been returned to the tribes. Most of these artifacts were taken from American Indian burial sites.

When removing the pieces from the ground, preservatives were added in order for them to maintain their shape and original form, said Kiersch.

These preservatives contain pesticides, which are harmful to human beings.

After being displayed in museums, the artifacts were returned to descendants of the American Indians and have been used in different ceremonies and funerals. When these items are put on or used, the pesticides have caused illnesses and in some cases, death.

In order to complete the assignment, students will be given one week for planning the film, one week for production, and one week for editing.

David J. Dubos has been hired to direct the film.

He has won awards from the New Orleans, Houston, and Sundance Film Festivals for previous works.

OKCCC student Susan Markwell has been hired to write the script and OKCCC adjunct professor Rick Lippert will be line producer.

A few seats are still available on a first come first serve basis. Students are encouraged not to wait to sign up for the class.

Spanish certificate in the works

Father's Day happenings

By Ashley Martin

Father's Day is Sunday, June 16, and many businesses in the Oklahoma City metro area will be observing the day to honor dads everywhere.

Brookside Golf Club and Pro Shop, located at 9016 Shields Blvd., has reasonable rates on golf games everyday, and Father's Day will be no exception.

Students and their fathers can play all day for $11 per person. After 2 p.m., the price goes down to $9 per person.

For Father's Day lunch or dinner, Catfish Cabin, located at 6317 N. Meridian, offers an all-you-can-eat buffet of fried catfish, peel-and-eat shrimp, yellow crab and crawfish. Doors open at noon.

For those who like to eat cheap, registering for a Fan Club Card at Hooters, 2109 S.W. 74th St., will earn the participant a 20 percent discount on food purchases.

For those who prefer to do their Father's Day shopping online, go to www.amazon.com to save up to $50 on more than 120 different tools.

Amazon also has a wide selection of gifts for under $50 and they can be shipped in two to three business days — just in time for Father's Day.

OKCCC currently offers Spanish classes through the intermediate level as well as the more informal Conversational Spanish.

A mastery certificate allows students to complete a curriculum of less than 60 credit hours. The certificate can be expanded to an associate degree if the student chooses to continue to take classes. For more information, call 682-1611, ext. 7353.

College grads bask in glow of achievement

More than 900 OKCCC graduates filled the Cox Convention center in downtown Oklahoma City

By Kat Mohr

Smiles and cheers filled the auditorium of the Cox Convention Center in Oklahoma City May 10 during OKCCC's 30th graduation ceremony.

More than 900 students graduated from OKCCC last semester.

Susan VanSchuyver, dean of Arts and Humanities, said the experience is wonderful for students.

"I think everybody should go through their graduation."

During the ceremony the commencement speaker Luke Corbett, chief executive officer and chairman of the Kerr-McGee corporation, gave a brief but motivating speech about what the graduates had in store for the future.

Corbett also talked about his experience with two-year colleges since he is a graduate of South Georgia Junior College in Douglas, Ga. Corbett stated his community college experience helped set the stage for what he was going to do with the rest of his life.

After Corbett's speech President Bob Todd recognized Professor Robert Allen for his achievements as a biology teacher by awarding him the President's Award for Excellence in teaching. Allen retired this year after working at OKCCC since 1972.

The ceremony closed as an array of black hats showered the graduates.

The Oklahoma Blood Institute needs your blood.

The summer blood drive will be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., Wednesday, June 26 in college union room 3.

"Although there is a decrease in donation, there is an increased need of blood in the summer," said Cindi Draper, OBI donor recruiter.

"This is especially true since July 4 will be the following week [after the blood drive]," she said.

Potential donors must be at least 17 years old and weigh 105 pounds. Donations cannot be given within a year of getting a tattoo and all piercings must have been done at an OBI approved location.

Also, people taking antibiotics or other forms of medication may not be accepted.

"We are hoping to get 25 to 30 donors this time," Draper said.

"Eat a healthy balanced meal within the 24 hours prior to donating," said Mike Jones, coordinator of student activities and promotions.

The body's iron must be at a certain level in order for the blood to be accepted and a good meal beforehand will help balance it out, said Jones.

Construction going as planned

By Ashley Martin
Staff Writer

Construction on the OKCCC campus is continuing to move forward on schedule, said Art Bode, vice president for business and finance.

Construction on the second half of the first floor remodeling, including work on the bookstore, the new main entry and the student commons atrium area is still under way.

Bode said the next phase of the project will be to complete three new classrooms and a hallway where the patio area was formerly located.

The classrooms and hallway are scheduled to be complete in July so they will be ready to use when the fall semester starts, Bode said.

"I would like to thank all of the students, faculty and staff for their patience and understanding as this project is being completed.

"Looking at the areas in the library and the main building that are now occupied, you can see the improvements in facilities and service to students," he said.

OKCCC regent appointed

For the last five years, Hines has been serving as director of the Crisis Pregnancy Centers for the Oklahoma Baptist Homes for Children.

She is responsible for two crisis centers, one in Tulsa and one in Oklahoma City.

"Our services help to provide free pregnancy tests to girls who can't or don't want to go to the doctor to get tested, or to girls who might be afraid," Hines said.

She said the program tries to help girls understand the ramifications of the choices they have made and help them deal with those decisions.

"It's an opportunity to build self-esteem, change lives and give these girls a new outlook on life."

Hines has been a charter member of Southern Hills Baptist Church for more than 30 years.

She is also a member of the Singing Churchwomen of Oklahoma, which includes more than 300 members, said Hines.

She said the group travels once a month to sing in different towns across Oklahoma.

"I truly enjoy singing," said Hines.

Hines has been a resident of South Oklahoma City most of her life. She graduated from U.S. Grant High School.

Hines went on to attend Oklahoma State University. She has attended St. Mary's University in San Antonio and has also taken a few courses at OKCCC.

Online banking safe way to transact

By Chad Morrow
News Writing 1 Student

Advances in technology are affecting various types of industry.

Peggy Miller, a professor who teaches Banking Management and Banking finance, said banking has been made easier through the use of the Internet.

She said although many people worry about banking online, Internet banking is safe and productive.

"The vendors that set up our site made sure that there was plenty of protection through the use of firewalls and passwords," Miller said.

Because of that, she said, customers need not worry about hackers and other types of computer crooks.

"Technology is making banking easier for employees and customers through the use of online banking and currency counters," Miller said.

She said customers can check their statements anytime with the use of online services, and closing time is quicker and accurately controlled with the use of currency machines.

So, the question of machine versus man appears.

Banks that are primarily maintained solely by computers usually fail Miller said.

She said having personal interaction is a comfort zone that may not be interfered with for a long while.

Anita Williams, director of the Banking and Finance department at OKCCC, said face-to-face encounters provide comfort for the depositor.

The future of banking is an open frontier and customers must have an open mind toward advancements in technology, Williams said.

However, she said, one-on-one interaction will never cease to exist because of the coziness it provides for the customer.
